Local Plattsburgh Favored.

Following out the Plattsburgh idea, why not have a little Plattsburgh camp of our own was the question asked Sunday by a local man who is much interested in the preparedness idea. There are hundreds of men in Killingly fit for military service, this man points out, while they might not be able to arrange for a Plattsburgh trip they might spend some time in a camp right at home. This would be getting back to the basis of the old "training" days.

Lot Buyers at Riverside to Build.

That the idea of a building boom in Danielson is catching on was quite forcibly demonstrated at the Riverside land sale Saturday afternoon. Several of those who bought lots signified their intention to build homes. This intent carried into effect will expand that beautiful section of the borough and give the town some of the houses of which it is so badly in need. Lots were picked out in different sections of the plot by the prospective home builders, some of them going as far north as Harry street for their home sites.

Some of those who bought intend to start the construction of their homes this summer, while others will defer this work until fall or until the spring of next year.

MEMORIAL SUNDAY OBSERVED.

Services Held at Dayville and South Killingly Yesterday.

The blue uniforms of the boys of '61-65 were conspicuous Sunday afternoon in the Memorial services held at Dayville and South Killingly. There were not so many of them, but still they were quite numerous, each and everyone a more significant living memorial of devotion to flag and country than when their ranks had not been so sadly thinned and the lesson of patriotism they had taught had not been hallowed by the passing years. This year the dimming Grand Army of the Republic to all who think of the trend of the times seemed more wonderful and impressive than ever before and those who joined with them in paying tribute to the comrades in arms who have gone beyond seemed imbued with the firm purpose and resolve to see to it that as each year brings its Memorial day the observance shall be religiously kept, even through the years when the best of those who fought for an absolutely free and united country have long since passed away.

At Dayville Sunday, the Thirteenth company, Coast Artillery corps, Captain E. L. Darbie commanding, acted as escort of the veterans and patriotic societies in the procession which visited Dayville and St. Jo-

GEORGE CALKINS ROBBED

Unknown Man Beats Woodstock Farmer and Takes His Purses—Afterwards Tries to Shoot Him.

George Calkins, 67, a resident of Woodstock, was attacked and robbed of a pocketbook containing $5 Friday evening about supper time. Later the same evening the unknown assailant went to the Calkins house, where Mr. Calkins was alone, and fired three shots from a revolver at him, one of which grazed the fourth finger of his right hand. Calkins had his gun, but after firing the intruder started to flee toward a swamp that lies near by. Calkins, however, shot at him four times.

Who the highwayman could be or what he wanted is a mystery in the quiet little town. Mr. Calkins cannot account for the attempt on his life

nor does he have the slightest idea who it was that tried to kill him. According to a description sent out Sunday by Deputy Sheriff Leonard H. Healey, the man is about five feet six inches tall, weight about 200, wore a hat of dark color, dark coat, without vest, blue shirt, striped pants with a belt, had a close cropped mustache and appeared about 35 years old.

Calkins says that he had been fixing a fence not far from his home, which is on a back road, and nearly half a mile from the nearest neighbor, Charles J. Johnson. Mrs. Calkins was out nursing and so he was alone on the place. In the latter part of the afternoon, an unknown man stepped from behind a bush near where he was working and asked if he knew where Mr. Brown lived. Before Mr. Calkins had time to say "No," the stranger jumped on him, clutched his throat and threw him to the ground, rendering him unconscious. When he came to, he found that his pocketbook containing $5 had disappeared. The man had gone. Mr. Calkins rushed to the Johnson home and told what had happened. He was terrified, but was calmed by the Johnsons, who gave him supper, after which he returned home.

Just before sunset Mr. Calkins was in his house and heard a noise. He took his gun and went into the yard, and not far from the house, standing beside a stone wall, he saw the man who had attacked him a few hours
